LESS FRAME.
MORE CHARACTER.

The Shaker door has earned its place in the British kitchen through honesty of design: a simple frame, a recessed centre panel, nothing added for show. With Bramhope, we have taken that familiar form and refined it. Styles and rails measuring just 27mm give a noticeably slimmer frame, so the centre panel reads larger and the whole door feels lighter, crisper and more contemporary.

It is a detail you notice the moment you see it, and one that only careful manufacturing can deliver. JJO has been making furniture since 1868, and Bramhope is built with the same attention to detail, here in Britain. Choose from four considered colours, each available across ECO Kitchens and Avalon Evolution Kitchen Furniture.

BRAMHOPE.
WHITE.

Bright, clean and endlessly adaptable.

White is where the slim Bramhope frame is at its most graphic. The micro 27mm styles and rails cast a crisp line of shadow around each panel, giving definition without weight. It reflects light generously, making it a natural choice for compact kitchens, north-facing rooms and open-plan spaces that need to feel calm. Pair it with brushed brass for warmth, matt black for contrast, or pale oak worktops for a soft Scandinavian feel.

BRAMHOPE.
KASHMIR.

Warm, soft and effortlessly elegant.

Named for the softness of fine cashmere, Kashmir is a warm, muted mid-tone that brings depth to a kitchen without darkening it. The micro 27mm frame gives the colour a tailored finish, so large runs of cabinetry look considered rather than heavy. Kashmir pairs well with warm metallics, creamy stone worktops and timber accents. It is a confident, grown-up colour for anyone who wants a kitchen with character that will sit comfortably for years.

BRAMHOPE.
REED GREEN.

A calm, natural green drawn from the waterside.

Reed Green brings the outdoors in with a muted, grey-softened green that feels restful rather than bold. On the Bramhope door, the micro frame lets the colour take the lead, creating a kitchen with real personality that remains easy to live with. It is especially striking on an island or a run of tall units, paired with white or Bleached Stone. Finish with aged brass handles and natural wood for a look that feels rooted and timeless.

BRAMHOPE.
BLEACHED STONE.

A soft, sun-washed neutral with quiet warmth.

Bleached Stone sits just beyond white: a pale, chalky neutral with a gentle warmth that feels lived-in from day one. On the Bramhope door, the micro frame keeps it light and modern, while the colour itself brings an easy, relaxed character. It works beautifully with natural materials such as limed oak, honed marble and linen, and suits both country cottages and contemporary homes. A versatile choice that never feels stark.
